The Leadville Herald takes back what it had to say about Garfield snubbing the Grant crowd.

We cannot lay before our readers this morning any account of the senate proceedings. This is a matter for congratulation.

The Uncommercial Cincinnati Enquirer now in want of the knife. It says: "The confirmation of Judge Robertson to be collector of the port of New York should give him power to prevent the re-election of Conkling and Platt." There is in the custom-house a standing army of Conkling men. They should be baptized by immersion as administration men or put to the sword. Our idea of civil service reform is that Conkling's head shall be broken with his own club.

General Grant arrived before his first return to this country was a succession of successive defeats since have injured his prestige. He failed to get the nomination at the Chicago convention for the presidency. He failed in the World's Fair commission and resigned the presidency. Now, dispatches state he fails to get the Mexican grant for his scalp of which he is suspected. General Grant is one of nobly endowed men, but there is a limit to his success. His record alone can not carry him to a successful project.

General Grant's old friends have upbraided his letter to Senator Jones for publication as he gives his views so frankly. Jones in his complaint outside of Roberts is referred to as brother-in-law and personal friend who is writing his biography. It is a question in his taste. General Grant has not and will not have anything to complain of with the present administration unless he openly buckles with it. His personal friends can command with Garfield Hayes administration but it paid every respect possible to the ex-president and kept his personal friends aside.

On the 17th of January 1882 Senator Conkling delivered a great speech on re-nomination making the president ineligible to a third term. This speech contained the following words which have some bearing on the post contest:

Do not suppose it is well to put a man where he will be tempted to corruption. May not some of you have presidents? I hope so. Such times and such things and such dangers and such duties call for such men. I protest against the idea that we can ever want a president who is a party tool or can ever possibly seek to secure a second election. I call him a party tool who seeks to secure a second election. The best Fellow in our politics should not be put to the necessity of choosing between his party and his self-respect.

Senator Conkling then defended the executive and attacked senatorial interference with patronage.

The importation of Mexican products across the line between the two countries at Laredo, the terminus of the line being built under the Palmer Sullivan contract to connect the City of Mexico with the United States is showing a remarkable increase. In 1875 the imports were $206 125 00. In 1877 they were increased to $400 425 86. In 1879 they were slightly increased to $457 450 84. In the fall of 1880 the contract with Messrs. Palmer and Sullivan was executed and this immediately increased the exchange of products at this point so that in 1880 they were $648 160 90. The business already done this year shows this amount will be very largely increased. The favorable effect of the building of this road on our trade with Mexico can hardly be estimated. It will bring about an immense interchange of products, and will materially aid in taking from England the Mexican trade she now has which belongs to us.

Our dispatches bring the intelligence of the death of Thomas A. Scott. He was born in Pennsylvania in 1823, and therefore was only 57 years old at the time of his death. In 1850 at the age of 26 he entered the employ of the Pennsylvania Central railroad as general agent of the eastern division. In 1859 he became its vice-president. In the beginning of the war he was appointed assistant secretary of war under Cameron. Here he distinguished himself by the rapid transportation of troops, and did much to save Washington. He finally became president of the Pennsylvania railroad in 1874. He was also largely identified with other railroad enterprises, particularly the Texas Pacific. The vast responsibilities and hard work which all these enterprises entailed finally broke him down and he died at a comparatively early age. He was a man of great energy, indomitable will, and immense capacity for organization. During his active career, his achievements surpassed those of all other railroad men. He did not make the money for himself that Vanderbilt and Gould have made, because his purpose was rather to create and control railroads rather than accumulate money. He went into railroading as a business to organize a better system to build more roads, and not to make money out of them. His loss will not be as severely felt as it would have been before he yielded up his vast responsibilities. He has left a monument to his name in the Pennsylvania railroad.

LITERARY NOTES

SPEECH OF MR. LOWELL

The American Minister to England at the Royal Literary Fund Dinner.

LONDON, May 4.—The chairman proposed "Prosperity to the Royal Literary Fund" in the following terms: "My lords and gentlemen, upon which several months ago I yielded to the solicitations of an old and dear friend to consent to occupy this chair. I did it perhaps without due regard to the old proverb that time and the hour outrun the longest day. I was living in a state of what I may call busy tranquility when the intimation that the dinner, which was fixed for the 4th of May arrived. I immediately appealed to a friend, a member of the committee, as one skilled in family physiology, and asked him what I should do. He said, 'All you will be expected to do will be to make a speech.' 'How long?' I said. 'Oh, not more than half an hour,' he replied. Like Lord Brougham, I was dumbfounded by this off-hand anecdote. I remember Professor Agassiz telling me that when he was first appointed a professor at, I think, Zurich, and went to deliver his first lecture, he was told that he was expected to occupy three-quarters of an hour—a quarter of an hour for the audience to assemble, and then he was to talk during the rest of the hour. He had his watch before him on the desk and waited, he said, as long as he honestly could, which, I suppose, must have been minutes. [Laughter.] He then began his lecture. Having said everything he knew in the world he took out the glanced at his watch, and found he had talked a quarter of an hour. [Laughter.] Accordingly, said he, I pulled up the rest of the hour by amplifying myself [laughter], and I have been doing so ever since.' [Renewed laughter.] I could not help thinking of this when I was told to make a longer speech than I had ever made in my life. Viscount Palmerston, without intending, I am sure, to be unflattering, told us just now that Mr. Cauly in his political defeat at Edinburgh, fell back upon literature. [Laughter.] His words, I confess, reminded me of the good old English rhyme—

When lands and goods are gone and spent
Then learning is excellent.

[Laughter.] A few days ago a very eminent literary man, speaking, in a public dinner, said literature had now become optional and science obligatory. He took, I think, on the whole too despairing a view of the situation. No man who now writes English represents science precisely pure literature than the gentleman to whom I refer [cheers], and I am sure that wherever the English language is spoken his books will stand side by side with those of Huxley, Darwin, Tyndall, and Miller, and find quite as many readers, and give as much instruction and interest. It is impossible, as he wished to do to draw a straight line between the imagination and the understanding. The line must be a winding one, with many curves and indentations, the one territory overlapping in some cases the other. Nothing is more remarkable in the case of many of the highest imaginations than with what they love from one side of the boundary to the other. In the case of the latter I think we find this precise union. I understanding and imagination with the distinguished gentleman to whom I have alluded to be impossible. We found the wills of the imagination pushing the bulk of the under-standing into undiscovered waters, while the deep keel of the understanding kept the fabric drifting from its course, and makes some certain port possible. [Cheers.] Science can never extinguish imagination, nor that thirst which human nature feels for something more than facts are apt to be. I think that as long as the human race lives Wonder and delight in natural things which perhaps are not useful but which are certainly not scientific will be born into the world with every child. [Cheers.] Wonder, which is the raw material of the imagination, will exist as long as the race exists. I do not believe that imaginative literatures will ever become a thing of the past. Goethe in the Walpurgis Night makes one of his characters say to the wild shapes that surrounding around him—you still there? Why, this is something beyond belief. Disappear all of you. The light so to speak, had been let in, but the fight persisted and would not disappear. It was not however the materialization of works of the imagination that I quite am protection. How can answers take care of themselves. Allusion was made in my speech I have referred to the mighty poets in their graves; but the mighty poets of these had their hours of insane and sorrowful desperation consultations. I do not think we have one and many mighty poets who have died in their misery. They were made of better stuff. One thing which this society particularly represents is the great change which has taken place in the character of literature in the condition of society as exemplified in the literary man. Formerly a literary man was the patron. The patron was in institution he was useful in certain ways. He gave the lesson what he was—quite—literary—compliment—and for the services rendered. Many of these patrons would not have been remembered but for the services rendered. Many of these patrons would not have been remembered but for the services rendered. Many of these patrons would not have been remembered but

JUMPED THE TRACK

A Passenger Coach Turns Over, but Injures No One

Mr. George Robbins, who came in from Silver Cliff on the Leadville express yesterday evening, related the correspondent of the GAZETTE the particulars of an accident on the Silver Cliff extension of the D. & R. G. railway, which happened [illegible] near Marshall Pass. The accident occurred near Marshall, at the Sandstone stage station, about half past 10 o'clock. A mixed passenger coach, containing about three [illegible] passengers, jumped the track and rolled over on its side.

One man who was standing on the rear platform when the car went over, was somewhat bruised, but no bones were broken. All [illegible] escaped with a severe shaking up. Just before the car jumped the track a freight passed over that at least built down a rail joint, and that the concussion of the passing of the must have been what caused the [illegible]. Conductor Butcher was in charge of the train and counteracted and his person was [illegible] the difficulties of the situation.

TRADE IN CHICAGO

A Generally Favorable Outlook

Chicago May 1.—The weather during the past week has been fine and everything has had a favorable setback. The country districts are busy with farming operations and there is some shipping in country trade for the season. City merchants however complain [illegible] the [illegible] country roads which keep the [illegible] of many. The banks are doing [illegible] business at good full rates for money and sufficient demand. The clearings for the week were $[illegible]. The [illegible] trade is picking up and as the railroad strike is over the supply comes more nearly to a level with shipments from the west have done better for the week. The opinion of many business men is that [illegible] although a question during the [illegible] the [illegible] commercial [illegible] demoralized and [illegible] expected however and [illegible] strike and to [illegible] the outside for the week.

Outside trade reports are received from Kansas Missouri and Southern Illinois of [illegible] Collections [illegible] which [illegible] will be [illegible] at the [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

The Experimental garden never looked better than it does just at present.

Considerable money was bet on the Phantom-Cuttis race in this city yesterday.

The Rev. H. C. Crane will preach in the Congregational church Sunday morning on "The Tongue of Fire." Evening subject "An Old Testament Definition of a Christian."

Dr. J. M. Newell of Leadville was among the activity at the Colorado Springs hotels yesterday.

Mr. E. C. Rich the western passenger agent of the Chicago & Alton was in the city yesterday.

There will be preaching at the Baptist church this morning and evening by the Rev. J. S. Mate.

Two colored ladies were visitors at the Peak yesterday. These are the first ladies to visit the Peak this season.

Hyperion's Strelitzias from Richardson from California exist are trying to secure dates for an appearance in Colorado Springs.

Miss Helen Talbot who has been spending the past winter visiting friends in the city, left yesterday for her home in New York.

Mr. James Hull returned yesterday from his winter's sojourn in Kansas and he is now occupying his residence on Cascade avenue.

The McWade company leave today for Denver where they will open a weeks engagement at the Sixteenth Street theatre.

Several small boys were brought before Justice Bonney yesterday afternoon charged with stone throwing and window breaking.

McWade in Rip Van Winkle drew the largest audience yesterday afternoon that ever attended a matinee in Colorado Springs.

The M. E. church services will be held in Cook House Hall today. Preaching at 11 a m and 7 30 p m. Sunday school at two o'clock p m.

Mr. Frank Griswold of the Peoples Bank left for the east yesterday on a short vacation. He expects to remain absent about three weeks.

Mr. Samuel Hall the business manager of the McWade company is a genial and pleasant gentleman and he has made many friends during his stay in this city.

Pleasant Mountain is now in full summer dress and the mountain drive yesterday on the Manitou road was filled with children who went there to spend the day.

The doors of the county jail do not under any circumstances open after dark, and the city officers are compelled to find other quarters for all persons arrested after night.

City Clerk McGovney informs us that poll tax to the amount of $600 has already been collected and turned over to him. Of this amount about one-half was paid in cash and the remainder in work.

Mayor Evans declares his intention of stopping the miscellaneous distribution of garbage upon the streets and vacant lots by offering a reward of $25 for the discovery of any one caught in the act.

Mr. Gustave C. Bartles, according to a certificate filed in the county clerk's office, has been appointed agent for the J. M. Brunswick & Balke company, the celebrated billiard table manufacturers, in this county.

Sheriff Smith amused himself yesterday afternoon by standing at the entrance of the Opera House and giving tickets of admission to some of the poor children who by their actions and words displayed a desire to see Rip Van Winkle.

It has been suggested by one of our public spirited citizens that a public drinking fountain be placed at the depot. It would not only be a good advertisement for our excellent water, but it would also be much of a convenience to the traveling public. Let's have it at once.

We were yesterday shown a handsome chair made entirely out of elk horns upholstered in plush and otherwise tastily ornamented. This fine piece of furniture was made by Mr. Otto Von Tesmar the taxidermist in the employ of Messrs. Aiken & Hunt, and it is by far the handsomest thing of the kind that we ever saw.

Mr. George M. Walker, for several years head clerk at the Grand Central hotel, Denver, can now be found at the Manitou Hotel, Manitou. Denver never had a more popular clerk than Mr. Walker, and his presence at the Manitou house will no doubt make it an attractive resort for the Denver people this season.

The dispatch as published in yesterday's issue of the GAZETTE about the Denver races would convey the impression that all horses which participated in the racing race on Friday were ruled off of the track as were also their drivers. Fact is the driver of Duster, was the only one expelled from the track by the judges.

Services in the M. E. church south, corner of Weber and Cucharas streets on Sunday at 10 o'clock a. m., and at 7 30 in the evening. Sabbath school at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. All cordially invited. Rev. J. L. Smith, pastor.
